EXTRACTS.

AN UNLUCKY COMPOSER.

Momras, the composer, whose death has been announced in France, had to contend against professional ill-fortune all his life. Years ago he wrote a song—"Page, Ecuyer, Capitaine"—and sold it to a publisher for $10. More than 200,000 copies of it were sold, on which the publisher made handsome profits, but Momras never got another cent. In other respects he was more fortunate. He married wisely and well; his wife bringing him a large fortune and making him almost as happy as himself. His departure from life, too, was a joyous one. He was at dinner, surrounded by family and friends, and the best of cheer prevailed. He took up a knife to carve a chicken, laid it down again, sank back in his chair, smiling, and was dead.

ORIGIN OF SANDWICHES.

Those who have read Travolta's "Early Life of Charles James Fox" and other memoirs of that period will remember numerous references to the profligate Earl of Sandwich, but many persons may have forgotten under what circumstances he invented the combination of bread and meat which bears his name, the world over.

Sandwich was a member of the Hell Fire Club, and played high. On one occasion, when for twenty-four hours he was too engrossed to leave his seat at the gambling-table, he ordered a waiter, by a hasty inspiration, to bring him, from time to time, slices of meat placed between slices of bread. The idea took in the club and immortalized the Earl of Sandwich.

BOYS AND GIRLS.

"If I had a dozen children I would want them all boys," said Mrs. Thirfty. "Boys can take care of themselves; they are half energetic, enjoyable, and it doesn't take half so much serving to keep a family of boys along." Now, if I should have any share, said Mrs. Sensible, "you are both right and wrong. I believe in a mixed family—part boys, part girls. The boys induce the girls to self-sacrifice; the girls refine the boys by their gentleness. A boy who is brought up with sisters makes the most manly man, and the girl who is brought up with brothers makes the most womanly woman."

BANYAN TREES.

A Mexican traveller says: "The North-Western Lumbermen make the statement that the much-angulated banyan tree of tropical Mexico, in no way resembles its brother of the Pacific archipelago, for in the Society Islands, he has seen banyan trees whose main trunk measured 30 ft. in girth, while some old patriarchs or giants of their species boasted of over 300 minor trunks or branches, which had dropped to the ground, had taken root, and in turn shot out branches that also fell downward and rooted. The Banyan tree of Guernon is but a puny in comparison. Its main trunk will seldom measure more than from 10 to 12 ft. in girth, and it reaches an altitude of 30 ft. before it branches, while the limbs may extend 30 to 40 ft. from the parent root. It is difficult to find a specimen that possesses more than 20 branch-trunks. These trees are quite numerous in the valleys and 'barraons' among the mountains of Guernon. They are generally found near running water, while, strange to say, their presence in any locality denotes the existence of 'plata' gold. Indeed, at least so affirms the Indians of the vicinity. Yet it is known that the true all the gold dust that has been gathered in this region was found in close proximity to trees of this species, from which fact it is fair to presume that this theory was originated by the seekers after mineral wealth in that section.—Journal of Forestry.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S GOLD PLATE.

No living monarch, European or Asiatic, ever met the Czar of all, the Russian, can boast of such a service of plate as that owned by Queen Victoria, to whose guests it is often exhibited, on huge buffets at either end of the banqueting table in St. George's Hall—vases, platters, cups, and candelabra, all wrought in the precious metal, the net value of which is said to exceed two millions sterling. Complacent among the trophies are the mimic "Ivy bird" and tiger's head taken from Tipoo Sahib's eighty odd years ago, and presented to her Majesty's grandfather, King George III.

The "Ivy bird" body and tail are composed of solid gold, richly studded with brilliant rubies, emeralds and pearls. As he stands in all his jeweled pride, one of the costliest fancies ever devised to gratify the whims of a lavish Oriental potentate, he represents a perceptual income of fifteen hundred a year, calculated at five per cent upon his intrinsic worth. The tiger's head once served Hyder Ali's masterful son as a stool. It is a life size model fashioned in solid silver, richly gilt, its tufts of rock crystal, and its tinsel of pure gold. Like the "Ivy bird," it fell into the hands of the British at the storming of Serinapatanam, where Tipoo himself, its valorous owner, met his death; and, as a brilliant memorial of our Indian conquests, could not be better bestowed than in ornamenting the banqueting hall of Hindostan's first emperor.—N. Y. Scottish-American.

A MAN'S WALK.

One of the most remarkable things about a man's walk is the diagonal movement which characterizes it. The reader may imagine the hands and feet to form the four corners of a parallelogram, and the diagonal limbs are of course the right arm and the left leg, and the left arm and the right leg. By "diagonal movement" we therefore intend to convey the fact that the diagonal limbs, during locomotion, always swing in the same direction. A soldier on parade keeps his arms motionless by his sides, and when he walks, he advances slowly and steadily with only his broad bayonet in his hand. On coming near a small mound on which the Russian colonel stood, examining the plans, he crept up his hands and knees, then suddenly started up, and ran at him, placing his bayonet on the officer's breast, and calling upon him, in such French as he was master of, to surrender. The Russian tried to draw his sword, but was prevented by the Indian, who refused, however, to surrender, until he saw that his adversary was unarmed. Then he was received, sometimes at M. Necker's Hotel, in Paris, sometimes at his Chateau de Saint-Omer, on the bank of the Seine, and chose places where he had no carriages or horses to drive, so that he might be more easily recognized among the men of letters, while his Tuesdays were reserved for his more intimate friends.
